Harvard Assistant Dean Is Leadership Consultant

Chafee E. Hall Jr., assistant dean and director of admissions and student personnel at Harvard Business School, will be consultant for the annual UK Leadership Conference Friday through Sunday at Camp Daniel Boone.

Dean Hall will deliver the keynote address Friday evening. A series of workshops on student problems will be conducted Saturday morning. A faculty panel consisting of President Frank G. Dickey, Dr. Charles Elton, dean of admissions, Dr. L. L. Martin, dean of men, and Mrs. Sharon Hall, assistant to the dean of women, will answer questions placed before it on Saturday afternoon.

After interdenominational services Sunday morning, President Thomas Sprageans of Centre College will speak to the group. The meeting will be closed with an evaluation session.

The conference is sponsored by Mortar Board, senior women's honorary; Omicron Delta Kappa, senior men's honorary; Links, junior women's honorary, and Lances, sophomore honorary.

Members of the committee in charge of the event are Sidney Crouch, Chairman; Sue Chandler, registration; Cynthia Beadell, recreation; Janie Walsh, correspondence; Sid Fortney, evaluation; Bettie Renaker and Norma Crawford, publicity.

Pledges Pick Officers

Officers for the 1958 pledge class of the Phi Deuteron Chapter of Phi Sigma Kappa were elected Monday night.

Those elected were Ron Reule, president; Bob Easley, vice president; Johnny Fitzwater, secretary; Bob Easley, treasurer; and Harvey Huff, sergeant-at-arms.

Pledge meetings are held by the class on Wednesday nights.

Keith To Speak To Travelers Club

Dr. Charles A. Keith, Richmond, past grand master of the Kentucky Masonic Lodge, will be the principal speaker at the October meeting of the UK Travelers Club, at 7:30 p. m. Thursday, in room 128, Student Union Building. Students and faculty of the Masonic order are invited to attend.

Chafee Hall will be consultant for the UK leadership Conference Friday through Saturday at Camp Daniel Boone.

Education Produces Leadership

An intensive study made by Dr. Russell R. Renz, University of Kentucky area coordinator in the College of Education in his publication, "Self-Directed Learning for Educational Leadership," indicates that a student-directed class in educational administration produces better leadership qualities than a more formalized course.

The study points out that in a student-directed type of relationship, students become more receptive to self and others, and they will not change their concepts of ideals, such as a democratic education.

One generally held belief which Dr. Renz's study indicated was not true is that in this type of relationship a student will become less prejudiced in his own likes and dislikes. On the contrary, the study shows that his personal reactions are not changed.

ID PICTURES

The last day ID pictures may be taken is Wednesday, Oct. 22. Pictures will be taken from 12-4 p. m. (CDT). Anyone who has not had his picture taken should bring his yellow registration slip to the front lobby of the Coliseum.

Bennett Cerf Pleases Record Crowd Monday

EDITORIAL NOTE—"The largest crowd we have ever had to hear a lecture," John L. Carter of the Concert and Lecture Series said of the assemblage to hear Bennett Cerf. "We estimate it at about 8,000 persons."

By DAVID P. SLACK

The International Patron of Honor, Bennett Cerf, mused his way through two hours of leisurely-paced, wide range chuckles, and left Monday night's Concert Series audience in a benign mood. Mr. Cerf is a tranquilizer that Squib and Upjohn should try to bottle.

A tranquilizer is precisely what Mr. Cerf desires to be; he is the gentle antidote for poison: Quemoy poison, Little Rock poison, bored-girl-16-kills-brother-with-shotgun poison, angry-beat poison.

Cerf fights this mental malignancy with a flaming sword of titters, giggles, guffaws, knee slappers, and inspired belly laughs. He collects stories from every corner of the earth and returns them to a world he fears has forgotten how to laugh.

"Alive today, Will Rogers would be arrested for subversive thought and action." And later on, "John Foster Dulles should laugh at himself, once in a while. He is like a bull that carries his own china shop around with him."

These and other salient points highlighted a lecture in which Mr. Cerf sought to chastise the morbid masses. He did not serve preaching. Only in the latter part of the talk did he become momentarily serious.

Most of the lecture was concerned with the aura of humor surrounding IBM, Adolph Rupp, Arlene Francis, TV, Iowa governors, plagiarism, Eisenhower and pancake makeup. There was much out-and-out corn and even reference to the shaggy dog and sick joke. (Mr. Cerf wants it clearly understood that there are no new jokes, only cyclic interpretation.)

We played an anemic questions-and-answers game at the end of the session. The queries were uninspired and a tedious anticlimax ensued.

In conference afterward, Mr. Cerf listed James Thurber, E. B. White, and Dr. Seuss (the latter for children) as his favorite American humorists. His next personal achievement will be called "The Laugh's On You." It is a collection of his own stories. Mr. Cerf deplores the smutty and minority-jibing jokes.

Cerf favors spontaneous humor over the planned, gag-writer's type. To this "humor-laureate" of America, "laughter is healing."

Downing To Preside At FFA Convention

Howard Downing, Nicholasville, national president of the Future Farmers of America and a junior in the College of Agriculture at UK will be a busy young man this week presiding over the 31st national FFA convention in Kansas City, Missouri. Downing is the son of Mrs. Agnes Fletcher, Nicholasville.

More than 10,000 FFA members from 48 States, Hawaii and Puerto Rico will register for the convention which opens Monday evening and ends Thursday at noon.

Licensing Is Prestige

"The licensing of professional engineers is adding prestige to the engineering profession," said Prof. Charles Krauss in an address before an assembly of civil engineering students in Memorial Hall Tuesday morning.

Quoting from the Kentucky law on the registration of engineers, Prof. Krauss went on to give a brief resume of the procedure for obtaining a professional engineer's license. He emphasized the importance of getting the license and listed the qualifications for getting it.

The University of Kentucky College of Agriculture will be well represented at the convention. Bob Scott, Fulham, president, and Bob G. Todd, Eubank, vice president of the Kentucky association of FFA are official delegates to the meeting. Ray Prigge, Boone County, State secretary, is an alternate delegate.

Bob Franklin, Lewisburg, is one of four FFA members in the United States named to receive a farm electrification award during the convention.

Douglas Downing, Nicholasville; Dean Wilmoth, Cecilia; Charles Watson, Princeton, and Joe McCarthy, Eddyville, will be awarded American Farmer degrees during the Tuesday afternoon convention program. The American Farmer degree is the top degree in the organization. Only one Future Farmer out of each 1,000 members is eligible to apply for the degree.

Eight Get Engineering Awards

Five graduate students and three seniors in the UK College of Engineering were awarded student memberships in the American Society for Testing Materials Friday.

The awards were given at a joint banquet of the Ohio Valley District of ASTM and the Blue Grass Chapter of the Kentucky Society of Professional Engineers.

D. F. Capelli, mining engineering, L. B. Claxton, metallurgical engineering, and L. S. Hardin, civil engineering, were the three honored seniors.

Graduate students receiving membership were Milton Evans Jr. and A. D. May, civil engineering, and W. K. Brown, J. B. Whitlow, and H. L. Mason, mechanical engineering.

Kenneth B. Woods, national president of ASTM and head of the Purdue University School of Civil Engineering, addressed the group on various problems faced in the construction of highways, railroads and buildings in the arctic and subarctic.

Howard Downing, junior in the College of Agriculture, is presiding over the national convention in Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 13-16.

SC Weighs Students' Insurance

A $500 medical reimbursement plan, was discussed by the representatives from the Indemnity Insurance Co. of North America and members of the Student Congress Monday night.

Under either the compulsory or voluntary plan the student would be fully covered in case of accident or sickness.

Parents are assured by the company that money for the students' education will not be depleted by severe medical bills.

This proposal includes: miscellaneous hospital expense, surgical expense, physician fees. It covers all types of accidents on or off campus. All regular enrolled students would be eligible.

Two versions of the proposal were discussed. A voluntary student participation plan covering nine months would cost students $5.45 per semester.

A twelve-month voluntary policy would cost students $7.25 and would include summer vacation. With 100 per cent participation the cost would be $6.90. Both policies would cover students who transfer schools. The plan does not cover a married student's family.

The North American Co. has an office in Lexington which would make possible a quick settlement of claims.

Audiology Clinic Staff Aids Handicapped Persons

By LAURA PRIOR

Directly across the street from the College of the Bible at 620 South Limestone, one of the University's most unusual departments, the Audiology Clinic, is located. The Audiology Clinic is a non-profit organization sponsored by the Lexington Council of Jewish Women, the Kentucky Society for Crippled Children, and the State Department of Health.

Its three responsibilities are teaching and training, research, and educational rehabilitation of hearing for handicapped children and adults. Clinical services are offered to over 500 children and adults annually.

The clinic relies on fees for a portion of its operating expenses. Faculty, staff and students of the University are entitled to services without a fee. The fees which are charged are in proportion to the person's ability to pay.

The average examination by the Clinic requires approximately two hours to complete, and includes such tests as the Psycho-galvanic skin response method and delayed auditory feedback, which constitute two of the most recent advances in testing hearing.

The Psycho-galvanic skin response audiometry is a method for measuring hearing that does not necessitate a voluntary response from the subject. Infants as young as six months can be tested by this approach. It's principle of operation is based on the use of a basic audiometer coupled to an amplifier and a graphic recorder. By conditioning the subject to a tone followed by a mild shock, which causes small changes in skin resistance, his hearing chart can be plotted when he begins to respond to the tone alone.

The delayed auditory feedback is an electronic method of delaying the talker's speech a fraction of a second while he is talking. As the subject reads or talks, he hears his "delayed" speech over headphones. This disturbs his talking, and by noting the approximate level at which his speech is disturbed, it is possible to determine the relative degree of hearing loss for each ear.

The development of speech and language is necessary for all children who have a handicapped hearing loss. If a child does not adequately hear speech and other environmental sounds, speech and language will not develop without special training, and recognition of sounds will not take place. The first step toward rehabilitation in these instances is a medical examination of the ears, nose and throat. This should be followed by an evaluation to determine the degree of organic hearing loss. As early as the age of three, training in lip reading and use of speech and language should begin.

The clinic does not have a training program for deaf children of school age. Intensive, daily training such as can only be obtained in a residential school for the deaf, or similar facilities, is necessary for the older child.

Science Meeting To Be Addressed By UK Faculty

Collins Wins Awards At FFA Beef Show

The Maysville baby beef show and sale Wednesday, Oct. 8, proved very profitable for Glen Collins, vocational agriculture major at the University of Kentucky.

After winning approximately $180 in premium money in addition to various ribbons and trophies, the Mason County youth sold his champion for $53 a pound or $500. Glen and his champion had taken the Grand Champion place in the Future Farmers of America division and Reserve Champion of the show.

Collins graduated from Minerva High School in Mason County where he was active in FFA while leading the class of 1958 in scholarship.

Glen plans to use his sale money toward his college expenses.

Campus Cinema

Lexington is generally regarded as one of Kentucky's few cultural centers. It has gentlemanly racing, the University, many first rate concerts and lectures, plus places of historic interest and examples of excellent architecture all within or near the city limits. But the city is noticeably lacking in good cinema which may be classed as artistic, or even good.

True, it would take a city at least the size of Louisville to financially support a theater which confined its showings to purely artistic films. It should be the responsibility of the University, therefore, to provide such quality entertainment for the audience that undeniably exists in Lexington, especially among University faculty and students.

It wasn't long ago that such a program was in effect on the campus. Campus Cinema provided, for a very nominal charge, both foreign and American movies of very high caliber. They weren't the most recently produced films, but they were good and were quite popular.

They were discontinued, however, because of a lack of a suitable theater on campus. For a time, they were shown in Guignol Theater, but conflicting schedules with dramatic rehearsals and productions forced the series to continue in Memorial Hall. The impossibility of satisfactorily showing a movie in this hollow chamber was immediately noted, however, as the poor acoustics there echo everything said once or twice, making it quite difficult to hear and impossible to enjoy a movie. So the showings were discontinued completely, after much complaining from the audience.

Extended Programs had charge of Campus Cinema. It was a non-profit venture. Tickets were 35 cents each, or an average of about 20 cents a movie if you bought a season ticket. Spokesmen for Extended Programs have expressed an intense interest in such cinema, and according to them, the department is eager to renew the series, if Guignol or some suitable auditorium can be used.

But conversely, spokesmen for Guignol still maintain, and apparently rightly, that there is just not enough free time in the theater, because of heavy demands from Guignol dramatic productions, Blazer lectures, music and drama festivals to schedule movies as well. They said it is just impossible to work out a regular schedule for the movies, and such a program would require its own regular schedule.

So, the matter is temporarily at a standstill. The whole problem could be solved if Memorial Hall were remodeled into a decent theater, with acoustics and modern widely-spaced seats to replace the echos and uncomfortable chairs that now exist in UK's only readily available auditorium. Moreover, many other programs such as queen contests, lectures and concerts would be greatly benefited if the auditorium were renovated.

The Quemoy Cease-Fire

By J. M. ROBERTS
Associated Press News Analyst

The United States is assessing the extension of the Quemoy cease-fire as meaning the end of the current crisis there, and wondering where the Communists will start creating trouble next.

Extension of the Quemoy truce from one to three weeks represents a victory for American pressure against the use of force to settle political arguments.

One of the chief results of the crisis has been promulgation by President Eisenhower of the idea that armed opposition to the use of force is now a general American principle. Within a relatively few weeks it has been applied in the Middle East and the Far East.

For years it has been applied in Europe. It was applied in Korea. The strong implication of Eisenhower and Dulles statements during the recent passage at arms with the Chinese Reds is that the principle now applies everywhere.

The Chinese Reds are reiterating that they do not accept the principle. "We are free to fight when we want to fight and stop when we want to stop," they said in their statement.

The fact is, however, that international Communism wanted to stop its provocations in both the Middle East and the Far East when the American posture became so positive that they could not continue their tactics without risking war.

The Red claim to retention of the initiative is within itself one of the best reasons for believing that the Quemoy cease-fire has now become the de facto truce to which Secretary Dulles referred as a prerequisite to international consideration of the Red territorial claims.

A voluntary resumption of the intensive bombardment would lead other Asiatic nations to a sure judgment as to who is responsible for the trouble. This will become especially true as the United States begins to reduce the force recently built up in the area.

Many observers would not be surprised if the international Communist campaign centered for a while on Europe, through propaganda connected with the issue of nuclear testing and disarmament in general. These are topics to which the Reds have especially addressed themselves at the current meeting of the United Nations General Assembly. The Geneva Conference on a testing ban will begin soon. The Reds always make an effort to divide the United States from her European allies on these issues.

The Communist stirring spoon will also be discernible soon in the boiling political pots of Pakistan, Burma and again in the Middle East.

Whether these or some other trouble spots will again evoke the Washington policy of force-against-force remains to be seen.

Evils Of Educational TV

To The Editor:

It is not hard to determine the reason for the current popularity of educational television in American public education. In many of our secondary schools the shortage of qualified teachers has guaranteed almost any educational innovation a great deal of success. And the current trend toward educational television is in line with the American tradition of public education which has always produced a very large number of individuals neither able to read nor write.

Educational television will now make it possible for an even larger number of individuals to discard their textbooks in favor of the time-honored lecture method which should have gone out of existence with the invention of the printing press. This means that a very large number of students will have failed to develop the minimum degree of reading skill necessary for future intellectual development.

I do not expect educational statistics to reveal this, however, since the majority of students graduating in the past were not required to do much reading and the graduates of television education will be no worse off in this respect. The important fact is that educational television is now being expounded as the solution to most of the ills of public education and the fact is that it hasn't even attacked the central problem—the inability of students to read and comprehend the material that they must master in order to make further development possible. An individual cannot stay in school all of his life for the purpose of being spoon-fed by his intellectual superiors.

Sincerely,

Gerald K. Sonell

Military Minds Defended

(The following article was submitted by Michael Warren Brown, a member of Pershing Rifles and ROTC. In it he argues against a recent "Kernel" which quoted author Herbert George Wells' views of military minds. While our opinion is diametrically opposed to Brown's, we are presenting the latter's argument in the interest of fairness to those who share Brown's feeling. —THE EDITOR).

If you were told that Gen. Robert E. Lee and Gen. Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson were unimaginative men of low intellectual quality, would you believe it?

I wouldn't, and I was most surprised to learn that there are individuals here on campus as well as elsewhere who have thoughtlessly answered "yes" to the above question by accepting as valid an opinion of H. G. Wells' which maintains that "The professional military mind is by necessity an inferior and unimaginative mind; no man of high intellectual quality would willingly imprison his gifts in such a calling."

By agreeing with Wells, these unthinking individuals have automatically placed such men as Washington, Wayne, Scott, Lee, Sheridan, T. J. Jackson, Pershing, MacArthur, Marshall, Eisenhower and a host of others on a list of "inferior" and "imaginative" slaves. They have thereby reduced a great portion of American history to a mediocre tale whose major characters were little better than high-grade morons; they have implied that our service academies are nothing more than special institutions for the mentally deficient.

In view of the grave consequences which might result should such an absurd fallacy be allowed to pass by unchallenged, I sincerely feel that it would be wise for me to briefly point out the obvious defects in Wells' statement which render it completely false.

Wells' initial declaration—that the professional military mind is by necessity an inferior and unimaginative one—offers no evidence to support its all-inclusive terms of denouncement.

This is to be expected of an utterance which obviously is based on prejudice or ignorance of history, for no thinking man could label Gen. Washington's brave and determined leadership of the Continental Army which helped win our independence, Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson's brilliant march around the Union forces at Chancellorsville, Gen. Dodge's effective supervision of the construction of the Union Pacific transcontinental railroad, Gen. Marshall's nation-saving economic plan and Gen. MacArthur's skillful and respect-winning demilitarization and reorganization of Japan as childish feats of mental incompetents. Logically then, his first statement must be historically untrue.

Nonetheless, it is with an undeniable ring of authority that Wells then declares that "no man of high intellectual quality would willingly imprison his gifts in such a calling." And yet, from what I've been able to gather from various encyclopedias, Wells never experienced the life of the professional military mind.

It is apparent that he knew nothing of such intangible enticement as service to country and satisfaction of the pre-eminence desire, one of the strongest driving forces in the human being. We must assume also that he was totally unaware of the present-day tangible benefits of a military career: retirement in the highest grade held, with corresponding retirement pay; guaranteed periodic pay raises; stabilized assignments; social security and survivors' benefits; medical care; specialization programs; army schools; the regimental system which helps to preserve esprit de corps, and the numerous family benefits. The second half of his opinion, then, was either the result of ignorance of the military way of life or malicious prejudice.

In view of the complete fallacy of Wells' opinion, which appeared in his Outline of History, it is with deep satisfaction that I read on page 7 of his 1931 edition his admission that the first edition contained several ambiguities.

It is with complete sincerity that I urge those who have accepted the original statement to reflect for a moment on the qualifications of its author and the implications of blind acceptance. I am sure that they, too, will see the bitter injustice of degrading those who, although they may not all be geniuses, have been and still are one of the major deciding factors in our national existence.

PAGING the ARTS

Everone Needs His 'Aku-Aku'

"Aku-Aku: The Secret of Easter Island," by Thor Heyerdahl. Rand McNally Company. 377 pages, including 62 photographs in color. $6.95 is available at local bookstores and in the campus library. The Kernel's reviewer is Jean Weatherford.

Everyone should have an Aku-Aku—is an assumption of Thor Heyerdahl, author of this best selling fact-adventure recently run serially in the Saturday Evening Post.

An Aku-Aku is the guardian spirit of a person, often the spirit of an ancestor who gives friendly help to the person and his family. Heyerdahl tells why in his adventures with the legends on Easter Island.

A remarkable voyage to the tiny island in the Pacific brought Heyerdahl and his party a wealth of discoveries about the island and its people. The author vividly describes the huge stone faces, some weighing over 50 tons, that dot the island. These faces have always been a mystery to the outside world because no one could discover how the statues were made, moved and erected by an ancient people who had no mechanical devices of any kind. This was Heyerdahl's mission—to find the answer. He reveals the method and actually has it performed to prove how it was done.

The fascinating story of the war between the long ears and short ears is told by descendants of these ancient peoples. The amazing story of the earth oven made by the long ears in the war years is proved to be true by Heyerdahl and his excavating crew. The island women proved better workmen than the men.

The book is an easy to read adventure of actual people and places. The realistic descriptions and settings make it an enjoyable treat. The story keeps from getting bogged down in too many facts by an occasional humorous incident concerning the natives of the island and Heyerdahl's family.

You will feel the excitement of exploring with Heyerdahl into "never-discovered" caves and paths of the ancient people.

This is a book for all people who enjoy adventure books and exciting, informative reading.

Classically speaking, ambassador "Vanyitchka" Cliburn is hitting the Gold Record mark (virtually an impossibility for the serious musician). The amazing thing is that Cliburn is worthy of the public and critical acclaim lavished upon him. His virtuosity reaches almost fantastic proportions. Of course, it will be interesting to see if Cliburn is a superior artist with other than Tchaikovsky and Rachmaninov. Perhaps when the vulgar aftermath of his Russian triumph abates we will see a display of mature musicianship. At any rate: Hail the Conquering Hero; Van Cliburn performs March 3 in Lexington in the Concert and Lecture Series.

'Northern Light' Gleams Brightly

By PHILIP COX

Veteran author A. J. Cronin again appears on the literary scene carrying a torch—not one that burns steadily, but one that flames with interest and color. Throwing it into the laps of the sensation-seeking journalists, he calls it "The Northern Light." (Little, Brown and Company. 252 pages. $4.00).

The Northern Light, a daily paper in the Northumbrian Borough of Hedleston, England, has been owned for generations by the Page family, a journalistic family in the highest sense of the word. The latest member of the clan, Henry Page, is no exception.

Henry is regarded by some persons, among them his own daughter, as old-fashioned, and by others (his editors) as a fine man of the community. A past mayor, he turns down a fat offer for his paper. He is uncertain as to why a large London syndicate would want the Light. His refusal to sell brings fat, weak Harold Smith and smooth, heartless Leonard Nye to Hedleston as editors of the opposition paper, the Chronicle.

Sparks begin to fly as soon as Page finds himself besieged by a flood of sharp publicity stunts for the soon-to-arrive Chronicle.

The narrative moves rapidly—for both the reader and Mr. Page find out quickly what all the 'shootin' and the 'shoutin' are about. The first issue of the Chronicle scoops Page with an announcement of a soon-to-be-built government plant which will greatly increase the city's population.

Page finds himself somewhat hampered in his struggle by a socially conscious wife, who sits around the house "wearing her bridge-party hat with the bunch of cherries," and by a daughter who tells a reporter for the opposition paper that she and her mother "are regular and devoted readers of the Chronicle."

Another problem for Page is his somewhat less than stable son, David, who lives with his wife in a cottage on the coast. David, who is recovering from a nervous breakdown, is working on a book.

Page, of course, would rather steal the crown jewels than sell the Light, and to avoid doing so, he borrows every penny he can; he sells his china collection, and even mortgages his house. Then

The practice of pinning a girl is a carry-over from an old Neanderthal game known as "Pin the tail on the donkey."

Broadway Critic Pans Nash's Play, 'Handful Of Fire'

By MARK BARRON

NEW YORK (AP)—A hocus-pocus type of play, "Handful of Fire" has opened at the Martin Beck Theater with a resplendent cast of players. But it is a play of minor quality.

Playwright N. Richard Nash, who has had several hits among his seven plays which have been produced on Broadway, wrote this one. It can not compare with his "The Rainmaker," which was well received here.

"Handful of Fire," co-produced by David Susskind and the Playwrights Company, tells the story of implausible people in a rather bizarre setting, a Mexican town. There are the usual colorful characters such as bull fighters and tamale vendors.

The principal story is that of a wealthy man, who likes to pretend to be a gentleman but who actually is making his loot by shipping girls across the border into the United States to peddle their feminine charms.

His madame, Silva, is in love with him, but he is in love with one of her proteges. And this girl, Maria, is in love with Pepe, a lad she has picked off the streets. Their relationship inspires the two young people to seek respectability.

just when the trials of Job begin to seem mild, the Chronicle buys (Page only rented it) his printing plant and closes it down for repairs.

"The Northern Light" is a novel that lacks length, but its torch is bright while it burns.

Mrs. Roosevelt's 'On My Own' Is Candid Biography

By JACK SIMCOX

"On My Own," by Eleanor Roosevelt (Harper, $4.00) is a chronicle of activities of the ex-president's wife since the death of FDR. In it Mrs. Roosevelt shows herself to be the repository of a famed idealistic philosophy, and also the possessor of a full-fledged practical political philosophy.

Writing, as she says, during a period near "the end of my active life," the author again speaks her mind courageously—with a candor that has been her chief characteristic in such earlier books as "This Is My Story" and "This I Remember," and that particularly was demonstrated at the 1956 Democratic Convention, as anyone who attended it can attest.

Those who have followed the author's literary career need not be reminded of the intensely individual quality which mark Mrs. Roosevelt's books as invaluable contributions in domestic and international politics.

In her idealism, Mrs. Roosevelt presents views which conservative and perhaps the strictly "practical" minds may reject, but "The First Lady of the World," as the jacket refers to her, chose her pattern of thought years ago, and only recently has applied it to world conditions with portfolio.

In the new book, Mrs. Roosevelt describes her formative years as a UN delegate, her tour of the world, her conferences with Khrushchev, Molotov, Litvinov and, at some length, her dealings with Dr. Alexei P. Pavlov, a nephew of the famed psychologist Ivan Pavlov.

Of Dr. Pavlov, the author says, "... Since he was obviously a man of education and social position, he seemed to feel the necessity of proving to everybody that he was a good and faithful Communist. He was a brilliant talker, good at repartee, and he often gave me a difficult time in committee meetings on controversial issues that provided the Communist with opportunities for ridicule or misrepresentation.

"More than once Dr. Pavlov arose with a flourish, shook his white locks angrily and made a bitter attack on the United States on the basis of some report or even some rumor that had to do with discrimination against Negroes, particularly in our Southern states."

Perhaps Mrs. Roosevelt is most vociferous on the issue of human rights. She describes her years as chairman of the UN Human Rights Commission in some detail, terming her efforts "My most important task."

Her closing chapter is devoted to impressions she received upon her visit to the Kremlin—where she conferred with Khrushchev and Russian diplomats over a three-week period. The conclusion takes the form of a warning for all Americans:

"I was—I still am—afraid that Americans and the peoples of the rest of the free world will not understand the nature of the struggle against Communism as exemplified by the Soviet Union. It is urgently important that we see clearly the things that must be done."

"We are in a great struggle between two vastly different ways of life. While we must have guns, atomic weapons and missiles for retaliation against aggression, they are not going to win this struggle or prevent a catastrophic world war. Nor is belief in the idea of democracy likely to have great effect in areas where democratic institutions are not established."

"If our way of life and our hard won freedoms are to survive—or perhaps, if anything is to survive in the Atomic Age—and flourish, we must provide leadership for free peoples, but we must never forget that in many countries, particularly in Asia and Africa, the freedom that is uppermost in the minds of the people is the freedom to eat."

Tackles Boone, Lindon Are 'Players Of Week'

By LARRY VAN HOOSE

Superb defensive combat in the face of the beefiest, smartest line Kentucky will face all season has won Wildcat tackles George Boone and Bob Lindon the Kernel's "Players of the Week" Award.

Boone, determined junior from Louisville, Ky., and Lindon, hulking Hazard, Ky. co-captain, slammed the door on a powerful Auburn running game only to see the Plainsmen shoot Kentucky's upset hopes down with a deadly aerial game for an 8-0 victory.

Leading the Wildcats' most outstanding defensive effort of the campaign the two tackles are the first linemen to be honored with the Kernel's weekly award. Others to win the title were Bobby Cravens and Calvin Bird.

For a griddier who appeared at UK football practices in 1956 without a grant-in-aid, Boone has come a long way. An attention-grabbing yearling season by the 198-pounder won Boone his numeral at a right guard position.

Continuing his determined play, the Louisville lad won a starting position in two games last season on his way to being named on the Southeastern Conference's All-Sophomore team. Early season sophomore performers had already led Coach Blanton Collier to say of Boone, "He's one of the most improved players on the club."

For co-captain Lindon, the Auburn contest was satisfying in that the number one team did not push his embattled linemen teammates around. "Tank," a 237-pound senior, started his UK grid career in unspectacular manner by not winning a numeral for his efforts with the 1954 frosh squad.

A year of red-shirting was slated for the tight-lipped Lindon the next year and he played behind Lou Michaels in 1956, when the eventual All-American tackle was averaging 56 minutes a game. Still the mountaineer athlete was named to the honorable mention list of the SEC's All-Soph team.

Last year Lindon was Kentucky's "other" tackle as the rugged Michaels overshadowed all Cat linemen with his super efforts. He saw a total playing time of 356 minutes in winning his first collegiate letter and was once named to the SEC checklist for outstanding play in the Xavier game, one of three the Wildcats won last season.

Looking forward to the Louisiana State contest this Saturday night, Lindon has a personal score to settle with the Tigers. He suffered a knee injury which cost him to miss the second half of that game and a starting assignment against Georgia the next week.

The modest, quite-spoken tackle praised the team morale as being higher than last year and credited the improved team line efforts to a feeling among the linemen to gang tackle and to help each other carry out defensive assignments.

Rupp's Roundballers Prep

Young Kentucky starts tuning up today as the 1958-59 basketball season opens in a familiar situation. Kentucky is again occupying the national cage throne. The Wildcats, Adolph Rupp's 29th edition, go into the opening prep sessions with only one starter returning from the NCAA championship squad. But SEC cage coaches aren't breaking out the crying towels yet. An abundance of talent up from last season's frosh unit and the return of Roger Newman and lettermen Don Mills and Phil Johnson make the Cats a powerful contender for their 19th conference championship.

Wildcat World

By LARRY VAN HOOSE
Kernel Sports Editor

The youngest rivalry in the Southeastern Conference has its ninth renewal Saturday night when Kentucky battles LSU in what could be the most important game remaining on the Wildcat card.

The Cats, undoubtedly the strongest two-time loser in the rugged SEC, have to notch this victory if a first division finish is to be realized. Any championship hopes the young UK grid-ders might have entertained were deflated by Auburn's talented Tigers Saturday, but the battle put up by the Cats should inspire Coach Blanton Collier's crew on as the schedule goes into the homestretch.

UK followers may be in for a pleasant surprise when the lend gets its most important renewal before an expected jammed house in Tiger Stadium in Baton Rouge. Boys like Bobby Lindon, Bob Talamini, Dickie Mueller, George Boone, and the rest of Kentucky's hard-nosed, courageous line are the basis for our assumption that LSU can expect its toughest conflict of the year from a team which holds the key to Coach Paul Dietzel's season.

The Kentucky line must contain explosive Billy Cannon and halfback turned fullback J. W. Brodnax, who have tormented four opponents this season. Rice, Alabama, Hardin-Simmons, and Miami have fallen to this powerful offensive combination so far.

On the offensive side of the UK ledger, things are indeed bright when the Cats field a physically fit unit. Quarterback Lowell Hughes is the biggest question mark at this point, but prospects are good that the junior signal-caller will be ready to lead the Kentuckians Saturday night. Bobby Cravens and Glen Shaw will both probably be in better shape than they were in for the Auburn tilt and Calvin "Thunder" Bird is certainly capable of showing the vaunted Mr. Cannon some offensive wizardry.

So the Kentucky team that could be expected to be flat after two bruising losses could by the same token be the battle-wise bunch who hands LSU its first defeat of the season as the Bayou Tigers face the first of three crucial SEC games. After UK, the Bengals meet Florida and then Mississippi.

"I have 43,000 reasons why I'm sold on my job"

Emil R. San Soucie got his A.B. degree from Harvard in 1954. He joined the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania in early 1955. Today, three short years later, he's in charge of 35 employees in a West Philadelphia business office serving 43,000 customers.

"It's an interesting job," says Emil. "I guess that's because people are interesting. Every day, I talk with customers—and no two are alike. They all have different problems and service needs. That makes every working day different and stimulating for me."

"There's also a great sales opportunity. Homes and businesses need the convenience and efficiency that up-to-date telephone facilities offer. It's a strong story, and we tell it often and enthusiastically.

"Outside the office, I'm active in local civic affairs. And I'm always a bit nixed—and pleased—by the respect people show for the telephone company and for a young fellow in my position."

"I don't know where a man like me with management ambitions has a better opportunity."

Many young men are finding interesting and rewarding careers in the Bell Telephone Companies. There are opportunities for you, too. Talk with the Bell interviewer when he comes to your campus. Read the Bell Telephone booklet on file in your Placement Office.

THE BRIDGE ADDICT

By ANDY EPPERSON

Two mismatched Bridge players were partnered in a duplicate game one night in a last minute arrangement. One was an expert and the other, unfortunately, was a duffer.

As the game progressed, the duffer made mistake after mistake and, like most duffers, seemed to be blissfully ignorant that anything at all was wrong. The expert, an unusually mild mannered player, showed a great deal of restraint in holding his temper.

Toward the end of the night, well after they were hopelessly behind, the duffer excused himself to go to the men's room. After he had left the table, his expert partner, unable to restrain himself any longer, turned to the opponents and said, "Believe it or not, this is the first time tonight, I've known what the so and so is doing."

The history of Bridge, though relatively short, is filled with countless amusing anecdotes like the one above. They are as much a part of the game as a deck of cards. Some, of course, are true, some fictional. To distinguish between them would be impossible, or better impractical. The following one is said to have really happened at a national tournament. And, quite appropriately, it involves Texas and Texans.

There were two little old ladies who came to a table to play a pair of well-known experts. On the very first hand, the two little old ladies stopped at a mere contract of one club and were set one.

One of the amused opponents asked, "Where are you ladies from?" TEXAS was the reply, in no uncertain terms.

"You mean, continued the expert, that you came all the way from Texas to play a hand at only one club and go down one."

"If we'd stayed in Texas, replied the by now somewhat irri-

At the first game last Friday night, about 34 persons showed up. Many of them were students, reports Dr. Ryland.

Anyone with less than 20 master points is invited to play. If you desire instruction in duplicate play, Dr. Ryland will be glad to assist you.
